Garment Workers And D.P. Seek Security On Farms

A total of 285 farm loans amounting to $668,000 was granted last year by the Jewish Agricultural Society, whose work reached "a new peak of activity," according to its fifty-first annual report. Sixty per cent of these loans went to displaced persons, who preferred farming, in which they could be their own masters, a reaction to life in concentration and slave labor camps, Dr. Theodore Norman, general manager said.

Another potent influence, he reported, was the unsettled state last year of the garment and associated trades "in which numerous Jews find employment." Consequently, many applicants were garment workers who found they could no longer "bear the insecurity of unstable employment in that industry."

The money lent exceeded the previous record year, 1949, when 233 applicants received $560,625. Farm visits reached a new high of 4,645 and there were 286 new farm settlements.

Dealing with 5,000 families, the society found that these increases reflected "the continuing prosperity of American agriculture," and that the Jewish farm movement had grown in New Jersey, the Catskill area of New York, in Connecticut and in California, especially near Los Angeles and Petaluma, near San Francisco.

On the subject of D.P.'s, the society reported their "strong urge to be their own bosses" and that farming offered them a way of expressing this characteristic. Also, farming made the adjustment to life in the new country easier, particularly in language, the report said.

"In any case," it added, "whatever the reason, an examination of case files will yield a substantial increase in the Jewish farming population", reports the New York Times.

The society's policy has always been "to make loans where other lenders will not." The average loan last year was $1,993 as compared with $1,570 in 1950 and $980 in 1949. An examination of settlements made in 1946-47-48 showed that 83.4 per cent of those settled were still on their farms.

The report noted that despite the shortcomings of security for loans, the wisdom of the policy of "dependence on character" was borne out by the repayment record last year, when principal repayments amounted to $290,812, with the total outstanding being $1,396,328 on December 31, 1951.

Interest collections totalled $72,434, but this covered only 41 per cent of the cost of carrying on the society's services. These included settlement, loan, vocational, extension, educational and purchasing. The remainder of the cost of operating was made up by grants from the Baron de Hirsch Fund.

Gave Huge Sums To Welfare Of People

Frank Z. Atran, sixty-seven, business and industrial executive and president of the Atran Foundation Inc., a philanthropic organization, died in New York at Harkness Pavilion of Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center. He lived at 65 Central Park West, in New York.

Mr. Atran, a native of Russia, where he was born in 1885, fled from Red persecution there in 1925. He headed a textile and industrial business in France and Belgium, but left France in 1940 to escape the Nazis. He operated a chain of fifty women's apparel stores in Europe. In America, he was president of Atrabin, Inc., a textile company, and American Valdina, Inc., exporters. He also held large real estate interests. His wife, Mrs. Eugenie Diemerstein Atran, survives him.

Through the Atran Foundation, Inc., which he founded several years ago for philanthropic and educational purposes, he made large gifts for the furtherance of human welfare and educational projects. In 1950, he presented to Mount Sinai Hospital a gift of $1,000,000 to aid in the construction of a laboratory building on Madison Avenue between Ninety-ninth and Ninety-eighth Streets.

In January of this year, Mr. Atran donated a five-story building at Seventy-eighth Street and Madison Avenue to the Jewish Labor Committee, an organization representing 500,000 trade unionists in the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations. The building, which was opened in May, is devoted to combating discrimination and strengthening democratic situations. It is known as the Abram Atran Cultural House.

In March the Atran Foundation established a professional chair in Yiddish Language, Literature and Culture at Columbia University. Under the terms of the agreement the professorship and an annual scholarship program will be supported for thirty years by the foundation, says the New York Times. Three scholarships each year will go to students interested in Yiddish and two will go to scholars in the general linguistics field.

Noted Merchant Was Founder Of WOR

Edgar S. Bamberger, a founder and first president of radio station WOR, one of New Jersey's well-known merchants and a civic leader, died at his home in Avon, N. J., after a year of poor health. His age was 68. Mr. Bamberger had been associated with four of the best known department stores in the U.S. After his graduation from Johns Hopkins University, he started with John Wanamaker, New York, in 1903. A year later he joined the Hutzler Brothers Department Store in Baltimore, his native city.

In 1907, Mr. Bamberger joined his uncle, the late Louis Bamberger in Newark at the L. Bamberger & Co. department store. In 1922 he helped establish the radio station that later joined the Mutual Network as its New York station.

Mr. Bamberger retired in 1932 as executive vice president of the store, three years after it had been purchased by R. H. Macy & Co. He remained in retirement for a year and then purchased a half-interest in Harper's, a cash-and-carry food and department store in Hackensack. His partner in this venture was Frank W. Packard and the store became known as the Packard-Bamberger Market.

In 1935 he retired again. He continued his interest in the affairs of his community, however, and resumed his business career in 1943 when he became executive vice president of the Hospital Service Plan of New Jersey (the Blue Cross). Ill health forced him to give up full-time business activity in 1945, but he remained a director of the New Jersey Realty Company of Newark.

In 1951 he received a Brotherhood Award of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, for which he was New Jersey treasurer. He also was a recipient of the Silver Beaver, Boy Scouts of America's highest award, for

Was Dominant In Rare-Book World, Enriched U.S. By Building Up Great Libraries

Dr. Abraham Simon Wolf Rosenbach, who died at the age of seventy-five at University Hospital in Philadelphia, Pa., was unquestionably the most dominant figure in the rare-book world in the U.S. and in the opinion of many who followed his career, the No. 1 collector and bibliophile in the world, reports the New York Times.

During forty years as a dealer and collector, Dr. Rosenbach gathered the greatest collection of rare books and manuscripts ever known. The "Napoleon of Books," as he was called, also had at one time library treasures that comprised the largest inventory in the world, once assessed at $25,000,000 in the depression year of 1932.

John Fleming, vice president of the Rosenbach Company, which has offices in New York and Philadelphia, estimated that the far-flung transactions of "Rosy," as the collector was known to his friends, involved between $60,000,000 and $80,000,000.

A highly astute buyer with an unmatchable flair for the niceties of collecting, Dr. Rosenbach also was a brilliantly daring operator in his field. Like the late Sir Joseph Duveen, famous dealer in art, Dr. Rosenbach set the style and pace in his particular realm. As Mr. Fleming said, "Money meant nothing to him—or rather, it was something he had for a considered purpose, and he used it lavishly."

During the early depression years, when American buying of art and books was virtually at a standstill, Dr. Rosenbach made some of his shrewdest purchases—which what have been called "fabulous" results when the market swung back to normal, and even above.

Dr. Rosenbach didn't "believe" in the depression. In 1931 he sold an extraordinary collection of [illegible] the American Revolution [illegible] for the [illegible] Headquarters Papers had been purchased from the Royal Institution of Great Britain in 1929, and although he resold it in a bad year, it is understood he made a tidy profit on the deal. Mr. Rockefeller gave the collection to the Williamsburg Restoration. One of Dr. Rosenbach's most memorable purchases, the library of great English rarities from the library of the York Minster Cathedral, also took place in 1931. A few years later, when the purchase became generally known in England, Parliament passed a law forbidding the sale of historical treasures without its consent.

The collector was only 11 years old when he showed the first signs of genius in his field. He bought an illuminated copy of "Reynard the Fox" for $24—$10 cash and the rest in credit—at Haskell's Auction Rooms, into which he had wandered, in Philadelphia. When his career was well under way, he became known as the man who had purchased more private libraries than any man in the world. His score was seventy-two great collections. He was renowned also for his record acquisitions of eight Gutenberg Bibles, between thirty and forty first folios of Shakespeare, and forty copies of William Caxton, the first English printer.

In 1907, Dr. Rosenbach bought at an auction in England his first Shakespeare folio—the bard's collected plays—for $18,000. With this copy, now at the Widener Library at Harvard, the collector began the acquisition of Shakespeare's works, both folios and quartos — the single plays — that became world-renowned. In March, seventy-three volumes — folios, quartos and sonnets — were sold for more than $1,000,000 to Dr. Martin Bodmer, Swiss banker and vice president of the International Red Cross. This was Dr. Rosenbach's greatest individual sale, according to the New York Times.

The most notable sale of a single item was in 1927, when Dr. Rosenbach bought and then resold for $200,000 a second edition of Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," now in the Huntington Library in California. "Venus and Adonis" came from the Sir George Holford library, from which much of the important material in the recent Dr. Bodmer sale was acquired.

In 1946 Dr. Rosenbach bought at auction the original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland," hand-lettered and illustrated by Lewis Carroll. This was his second purchase of the precious little volume. He paid $50,000 for it, exactly eighteen years after he first purchased it in England, also at auction, for about $75,000. Shortly after Dr. Rosenbach acquired "Alice," Englishmen raised funds to retrieve the book, and it is now back home again.

Dr. Rosenbach also had the distinction in 1947 of buying the book that set the record price, internationally, at auction. The first to be published in the American Colonies, the tome was the Bay Psalm Book, the Puritans' interpretation of the psalms in verse. The "terror of the auction room" — another title conferred upon Dr. Rosenbach —paid $151,000 for the volume, which, with the collector's assistance, was presented as a gift to the Yale University Library in the same year.

It is next to impossible to list the great and imperishable works that Dr. Rosenbach so assiduously sought, and for the most part, triumphantly carried off. The collection now is not as it was in its hey-day, but only because the material has not been available.

At the present time, the Rosenbach collection is valued at about $5,000,000. The Robert Burns items in it are reputedly worth $1,000,000. There are only four or five Caxton items left from a collection that was famous 'round the globe, and relatively few love letters from a formerly unmatchable collection of Keats, Burns, Poe, Jefferson and Franklin. The Washingtonia and Lincolniana are still supreme, although the prize of the Lincoln group, the first draft of the Emancipation Proclamation, was sold eight months ago for $50,000 to Barney Balaban, head of Paramount Pictures.

Another great item that was sold in recent weeks, was the original manuscript of Richard Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," which went into the personal collection of Arthur Houghton, who formed the Houghton Library at Harvard and is vice president of Corning Glass. The manuscript was catalogued at $50,000.

Dr. Rosenbach was credited not only with having made rare books big business, but, in the words of a former manager of his firm who had become a competitor, with having "brought culture and scholarship to the rare-book business. He did more to enrich the United States by encouraging the development of great libraries than any other American."

The Houghton Library, which has the finest collection of Keats in existence, was assembled almost exclusively with Dr. Rosenbach's counsel and material. Other great libraries—the Folger, the Huntington and the Morgan, among them, have called upon Dr. Rosenbach for valuable aid.

In 1840, an uncle of Dr. Rosenbach began collecting children's books, printed in New York, and the nephew continued the collection. It turned out to be the finest ever formed, and was turned over in 1948 by Dr. Rosenbach to the Philadelphia Free Library.

Dr. Rosenbach was born in Philadelphia, July 22, 1876, the son of Morris and Isabella Rosenbach. His uncle, Moses Polock, ran a bookshop, and Dr. Rosenbach spent the greater part of his childhood in the company of Uncle Moses. It was in this bookshop—a famous meeting place of publishers and writers—that he received an education and thirst for fine books which grew in intensity the rest of his life, says the New York Times.

While attending the University of Pennsylvania, from which he received a B. S. degree in 1896, he

Woman Was Arranger Of Music For Shows

Mrs. Ruth Levien, a former arranger of music for legitimate theatre productions and one of the first theatre-party booking agents on Broadway, died in New York at her home, 170 West Seventy-third Street. Her age was 56. Mrs. Levien was the wife of Max Levien, engineer and builder who heads the firm of Levien Associates. She was known for her activity in Hadassah, Jewish women's organization, and helped organize the Bronx women's division of the American Jewish Congress.

Mrs. Levien did the musical arrangement for such productions as the "Willow and I", which starred Gregory Peck, and "Sons and Soldiers" by Irwin Shaw. She started her theatre-party booking agency in the early nineteen-thirties. Illness forced her to retire in 1949.

A charter member of the McCosker-Hirschfield Cardiac Foundation, she formerly was an officer of the Concourse Group of Hadassah and a life member of the Central Group of Hadassah. During the second World War she entertained at the Stage Door Canteen.

Besides her husband, she is survived by two sons, Maurice of Glen Cove, L. I., and Frederic, a Navy Ensign; a daughter, Mrs. Leonard Ramsky, of Falls Church, Va.; a sister, Mrs. Bertha Feit of Queens, and a brother, Jack Knoperstein, of Columbus, Ohio.

Seven rabbinical courts and 59 rabbinical judges in Israel were officially reinstated as the Knesset (Parliament) passed a bill extending the tenure of the courts and judges for one year. The bill as submitted by a representative of the Hapoel Hamizrahi party, called for an unlimited tenure and an official Knesset endorsement of the validity of the courts. Both proposals were defeated. Miss Maimon, a member of the Mapai Party, who proposed the accepted extension of lecture motion, pressed for the inclusion of women members on rabbinical court benches. She pointed out that the courts dealt largely with matters of personal status, and fairness required the presence of woman among the judges. Rabbinical courts are located in Jerusalem, Tel-Aviv, Haifa, Petach-Tikvah, Behevot, Tiberias, and Safad. Presidents of the Religious Supreme Court are the two Chief Rabbis of Israel, Rabbi Itzhak Halevi Hertzog and Rabbi Ben Zion Uziel.

NEW IDEA JOHNNY CAKE

two eggs
three tablespoons corn meal
three tablespoons sugar
one tablespoon flour
one-half cup sour cream
one-half cup cottage cheese

Mix together above ingredients by hand or electric mixing machine. Place three tablespoons of butter in a nine-by-eight glass baking dish, and heat in a 350-degree oven. When melted add to above mixture. Then pour the dough in the glass baking dish and bake for about twenty minutes. This cake can be eaten with sour cream or corn syrup.

one egg
three-quarters cup sugar
about two cups flour
one level teaspoon baking powder about one-half teaspoon grated lemon-rind
one teaspoon lemon juice

Cream butter and sugar. Add egg, flour sifted with baking powder, and lemon rind and juice. This should make a soft dough. Divide it into three parts, and press each part into the bottom of a greased pie-plate. Bake them in a 350-degree oven, for about fifteen minutes, or until lightly-browned. Remove, and place on a towel. Make a filling of one-half pint sour cream, mixed with one-quarter pound chopped walnuts, and one-half teaspoon vanilla. The Squire

BY A. A. DAVIDSON

Mr. Schreiber bought farms. Not all at once, of course: he never owned more than one at a time and there were times when he did not have any. He was a cousin of my father, but we did not see much of him at our home. There were a number of cousins of whom we never saw much; some of them I haven't seen yet. One day when I was quite young my father and I were riding in his car through a street in my home town and as we stopped because of traffic a man standing in a shop door raised his hand slowly in greeting. My father waved back. In answer to my question, he said the man was "Cousin Katzenelenbogen".

A name of that sort intrigues children; so, I think, does the idea of cousins who are grown people and not children. When next I passed that way I lingered in front of the shop. It had much to interest me: in the window were old prints, painted china, huge beer steins, enamelled matchlock pistols, oil paintings—heaps of bric-a-brac. I felt that this cousin was one whom it was worthwhile to cultivate. My dawdling paid off. Before very long the gentleman himself noticed me looking in and came to the door to beckon to me. As I saw him closer my courage ebbed a little, for he was—after all—really a stranger. With slow feet I went in.

"Do you know who I am?" he asked, bending his large head over me.

"Cousin Katzenelenbogen," I faltered. He had large ears and a big nose, and his manner seemed fierce.

"Hah! So you know. Why don't you ever come around? Or your father? Or your mother? Does Cousin Katzenelenbogen bite? Does his breath smell?"

Then, all the fierceness vanished. He patted my head and led me gently by the hand into the shop. At the back, sitting on a chair, was another man, looking very much like Cousin Katzenelenbogen. This other man had a moustache, a grey one, and was resting his folded hands on a cane.

"This is Mr. Schreiber", he said. Mr. Schreiber and I looked at each other. "Mr. Schreiber is also a cousin. I am blessed with fond relations. My cousin Abe Schreiber is treating himself to some false teeth and since the mechanical dentist's office is upstairs anyway, he is paying me a visit . . . He's also related to you: shake hands. Do you want to look at the pictures and the guns? Go, look . . ." I spent some time among the treasures, wondering how soon it would be before I could presume on the relationship to bring impressionable friends around. By and by I heard Cousin Katzenelenbogen say, "Well, Abe: are you going to buy a farm again?"

"Maybe", said Mr. Schreiber.

"And what will the old woman say? And the kinder?" This drew fire.

"What have they got to say? Am I a child?"

"Worse: much worse: You are a married man."

My attention was diverted by a Chinese puzzle box, and when I looked up again, Mr. Schreiber had work in behalf of that organization, says the New York Times.

Mr. Bamberger also served as secretary and trustee of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N. J., endowed by his uncle, which brought together top-ranking scholars such as Dr. Albert Einstein. He was a trustee of the Newark Museum of Art, the Newark Presbyterian Hospital and the University of Newark. He also had been chairman of the United Jewish Appeal campaign in Newark.

He was affiliated also with the Newark Children's Aid Society, of which he was former chairman of the executive committee, and the American Red Cross of the Oranges and Maplewood. He was treasurer of the Robert Treat Council of Boy Scouts.

At one time Mr. Bamberger was assistant treasurer of the New Jersey Republican Finance Committee. A former candidate for Essex County Freeholder, he served on a special committee appointed by Common Pleas Judge Richard Hartshorne to investigate the activities of Father Divine in Newark.

His first wife, Mrs. Daisy Mildred Fox Bamberger, died in 1935. He married Mrs. Mabel Simon Bing a year and one-half later. Surviving are his widow; three daughters, Mrs. Mildred Leopold and Mrs. Jane Bing, of Altoona, Pa.; and Mrs. Ellen Schindal of Ankara, Turkey; a stepdaughter, Mrs. Betty Bing Iselin, of Oceanport, N. J.; a stepson-in-law, August Bing, husband of Mrs. Jane Bing, and ten grandchildren.

Text Book Is First In Hebrew Braille

The first Braille text-book ever printed for the blind of the English-speaking world, Hebrew Self-Taught, by Zevi Scharfstein and Ben-Ami Scharfstein, has been published in two embossed volumes by the Jewish Braille Institute of America. Like the complete Old Testament, in Hebrew Braille, published by the Institute two years ago, it employs the International Hebrew Braille Code, adopted in 1930. The code is essentially a phonetic adaptation of the basic universal Braille alphabet. Wherever possible, consonants and vowels, already familiar to Braille readers in all languages, are made to serve for their Hebrew equivalents in sound.

Because vowel points used in printed Hebrew cannot be reproduced in Braille, it was necessary to adapt special signs for the vowels and all other peculiarly Hebraic symbols required. Unlike printed Hebrew, Hebrew Braille is read from left to right. This departure from traditional Hebrew usage, was made necessary for two reasons. First, in order not to place additional difficulties in the path of the touch reader; second, because reading from right to left would have imposed a severe technical difficulty wherever it might be necessary to write Hebrew and another Western language on the same line.

Permission for transcribing the book into Braille was given by the authors, and its publishers, the Zionist Organization of America. The American Printing House for the Blind, of Louisville, Kentucky, embossed the text on zinc plates from the Braille master copy which was transcribed by Mrs. Harry A. Cole, of Cleveland, Ohio. The publication of Hebrew Self-Taught was defrayed by the Sara K. Salaben Memorial Committee of Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

How Can I Start An Investment Programme?

A

By Planned Savings Through Life Insurance.

The basis of an investment plan in most cases should be life insurance. It meets in a sound and regular way the real objectives of investment — savings for the future, a retirement income and money for your family should anything happen to you. What is more, life insurance achieves these ends economically and without worry or risk. Discuss with a Mutual Life of Canada representative a life insurance investment plan for your future.

CITY-WIDE AND OUT-OF-TOWN DELIVERY

At the ancient Philistine city of Askelon the key to one of the houses was presented to the first settler in a newly built suburb erected by the Afridar Corporation, an Israel-South African Investment company. Recipient of the key, presented by Mrs. Golda Myerson, was Reuven Avramhami, a 32-year-old former volunteer soldier from England. Mr. Avramhami's wife, a native-born Israeli whom he met while in service, gave birth the following day to their daughter, the town's youngest resident. The second key was handed to Mr. Avraham Bracka, 28, who comes from the Philippines. First to move into the apartments will be twenty seven families from English-speaking countries. They will be followed by 40 families from Latin America.

Former members of the Mapam Party, Mrs. Hannah Lamdan and Mr. David Lifshitz, founded a new party called "Leahdut Ha'avodah" (Labor Unity Party) in Israel. The two members of the Knesset (Parliament) who had broken with their parent organization the Mapam Party, because it was following the Communist Party line, called upon those "who believe in Socialist Zionism without either right or left wing bias" to join them.

Leon Fleisher, 861 West 177 Street, New York, won the Queen Elizabeth piano contest and a prize of $8,000, at Brussels, Belgium. Mr. Fleisher, 23 years old, flushed with pleasure when he heard the result, but said, "this is my first and last contest." His wife, who stood by his side, agreed "the strain has been tremendous." Born in San Francisco, Mr. Fleisher is the only musician in the family of a successful New York millinery designer. His wife, Dorothy, whom he married five months ago, is the only non-musician child of Louis Druzinsky, for twenty-five years principal of second violinists in the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

The common cabbage may not have much glamour but it has very definite virtues as a health-giver. Researchers are engaged in discovering a substance that may prove helpful against the common cold, and another that may be beneficial to wounds, both in the cabbage. THE SQUIRE got to his feet. Cousin Katzenelenbogen called me over. He took a nickel out of his pocket and gave it to me. Mr. Schreiber put his hand in his pocket and brought it out with a purse in it. He opened it and peered inside. Then he produced—very slowly—a dime.

"So, since I am in this part of the country", he said, "take something to remember me by." I mumbled some shy thanks.

"Oy, Avrummelle, du bist ah reicher. With such riches I can't compete." Mr. Schreiber ignored the sarcasm. He put his purse back in his pocket and left.

That night at supper I told my parents that Mr. Schreiber was going to buy a farm. My father said, "What? Again?" and my mother asked, "How do you know?" and, "This makes the fourth time." "No, the fifth." And so the story came out. Mr. Schreiber had bought his first farm way back in the nineties; that is, not exactly bought it; he had "homesteaded" it under something called the Homestead Law. Mr. Schreiber was a pioneer. Mrs. Schreiber did not like to live out on the farm. Who would, with Mr. Schreiber? Mr. Schreiber had a lot of money. Well, why not: look how stingy he was. Mr. Schreiber worked like a horse on his farm. Mrs. Schreiber said she hadn't married a horse. She said she could take just so much.

When asked what Mr. Schreiber would eat if she went to live with her children in the city, she said he could eat hay like the other horses. If he wanted to eat like menschen, let him come and live in the city with other menschen . . . This had been going on over a period of almost forty years. It followed a cycle as fixed as the path of the stars.

During the summers we used to go on conjoint family picnics, involving several well-packed automobiles and trips into the country. Provision sufficient for a battalion was carried along, consisting of a few chickens roasted in paprika sauce and left to cool, many loaves of rye bread, white corn bread and pumpernickel, several bags of "new" dill pickles, cardboard buckets of coleslaw, basins of potato salad and "Greek" salad, pints of mustard, sliced cornbeef, pastrami, baloney, hard salami, rollbeef and roastbeef. This was all later made into sandwiches, but there were also egg salad sandwiches prepared in advance.

By way of liquid there was always beer for the adults and — for all ages — thermos jugs of orangeade, iced tea and iced coffee. A large supply of mixed oil and vinegar came along too; not as salad dressing, however, but to annoint the children as protection against sunburn, poison ivy and bee stings. If it happened to be a year when Mr. Schreiber had a farm, and if the farm was in riding-distance, we sometimes had our picnic at Mr. Schreiber's farm.

I cannot remember the first three (or four) of his farms, of course, and only Mrs. Schreiber could remember the very first, or homestead, one. I did hear something of the place he bought just before the 1914-18 War. It was said to be large, and well-stocked with all kinds of cattle. The farmhouse was commodious. During the term of his occupation the price of eggs went up to the fabulous level of $1.25 a dozen, and he developed a good trade with nearby hotels, whom he supplied with double-yokers. But it was the price of eggs that ended it. Literally hundreds of people in the district began to raise poultry. Unlike Daniel Boone, who considered a district too crowded when he could see the smoke of his neighbour's fire, Mr. Schreiber lived in a world of less spacious horizons: all that he asked was that he should not have to smell his neighbour's poultry houses. When this was denied him, he sold out.

As he grew older, he bought smaller farms. The first one I recall consisted largely of New England granite and, I think, would have been more profitable if run as a quarry. When our family invasion came down upon him, he was quite hospitable in his rather reserved way. He offered us freshly dug radishes and scallions to garnish the food—a bit too freshly-dug for all tastes, sometimes. Wash them off? Yes, but how could you be sure of the purity of the well water? Mr. Schreiber claimed the well was health itself, but even so, an attack of rheumatism forced him townwards again.

I would see him walking his daughter's dog and he always raised his cane in greeting. In search of health he travelled to California. There—his family claimed to be outraged, astounded; but they ought to have known—he bought a ranch. Well, it doesn't take much to make a ranch in California, true enough; one must not envisage herds of cattle or anything like that. A small orange or nut grove, a hen house, a few goats, a truck garden—that sort of Californian ranch. Mrs. Schreiber, divided between a yearning for the warm sun and a foreboding based on remembrance of things past, went presently to California. And presently returned. So after a longer interval, did Mr. Schreiber.

The rheumatism became arthritis, lumbago, and all the evil diseases of Egypt. Mr. Schreiber was ordered to sleep on boards, we heard. He had been to a famous clinic, which advised an operation. He had visited an expensive specialist, who recommended a brace. What did Mr. Schreiber do? No doubt you know. Mr. Schreiber bought a farm. He was then 77 years old; I visited him on one summer's day, in the company of the now feeble Cousin Katzenelenbogen, who had given up his shop. I knew that he was the younger of the two, but it was difficult to believe it. Mr. Schreiber jumped about like a grey-haired grasshopper, now lifting a sack of oats, now running down a fleet chicken, now sawing a plank and hammering it in.

"Do you remember, once," the city cousin asked me—we being momentarily alone—"in the shop, a long time ago, he gave you a dime? And I kibbitzed him about it? This is why he was always so close with his money. The family didn't understand. He's got to be independent, Abe does, and the only way he knows how is to go off and get a farm."

Mr. Schreiber enjoyed his independence another few years. One morning his neighbours found him dead, sitting at the table in his kitchen, seed catalogues spread out before him. I heard it said that "his farms killed him". I think they kept him alive.
